regulate the gamma of the monitor that Photoshop is previewing. If you have a monitor, the screen looks worse on your monitor than it does on your monitor's native screen, which is called sRGB. You can also use Photoshop for basic color management, and that's where the PSD (Photoshop document)

You do this via the File menu. You see the New Document window appear as shown in Figure 1-1, or you can choose to open an existing file from the Open Recent menu. You can also create a new file by using the File > New menu. **Figure 1-1:** The New Document window displays the files in your library. When you click OK, Photoshop immediately goes to work on the file. At the bottom left of the window is a preview of the active image. The preview has a little blue highlight box that indicates how the active image is currently laid out. If you click outside that highlight to the edge of the preview area, the preview lights up and shows you the image stretched or
